STROLLING PROFESSOR STILL PROVIDES STUDENTS WITH GOOD LUCK

Chemistry Professor William R. Johnston walked around campus with his nose in a book. That fact was immortalized in the Strolling Professor statue that now honors him. Chemistry students rub his head the night before their first test for good luck.

The statue is located in a small arboretum adjacent to Burlington Nuclear Labs. Before the nuclear reactor was built in 1953, that area was called the Court of Ceres and was structured similarly to the nearby Court of North Carolina.
